Archway Programs Receives Protective Mask Donation from Cappelli Tailors

Main line business owner donates to New Jersey nonprofit to support frontline workers.

ATCO, NEW JERSEY (April 17, 2020) – To help protect a more vulnerable population and support essential frontline workers during this time, John Cappelli, owner of Cappelli Tailors, has generously donated one hundred protective face masks to staff and individuals served throughout Archway’s Residential Community Homes and Supportive Living Program. The face masks will help ensure the health and safety of residents in addition to the Direct Support Professionals who care for them during this crisis. Ever since his business was deemed non-essential, John Cappelli and his team at Cappelli Tailors have been tirelessly donating their time and materials to provide reusable masks for those who need them. To pay it forward during the COVID-19 crisis, Archway Programs made a contribution to Cappelli Tailors to support what their business is doing to help the local community.

“This thoughtful contribution will help our frontline workers and individuals in our care stay healthy and safe. We all should have the mindset to get out there and do the best we can to find resources to help the community. Cappelli Tailors is a perfect example of that. To move forward, I think we all have a role in this and have to work together. This includes individuals on the front lines, the more vulnerable populations, and our local businesses,” said George Richards, CEO of Archway Programs.

The protective face masks will be distributed to both staff and individuals with intellectual and developmental disabilities that are served throughout Archway’s Residential Community Homes and Supportive Living Program. Archway’s Direct Support Professionals (DSPs) work around the clock to keep residents safe and healthy. According to Archway’s Director of Human Services, Direct Support Professionals are the unsung heroes of the Developmental Disability community.

“In the middle of the COVID-19 crisis, Direct Support Professionals have stepped up yet again to provide care, support, and safety for the most vulnerable. There are no days off when it comes to providing quality service to those who need it most. Our DSPs are there during medical emergencies, every holiday, birthday and everything in-between,” said Mickie Patetta, Human Services Director of Archway Programs.

Archway Programs has been providing support services to clients with intellectual and developmental (I/DD) in the community for over thirty years. In the Supportive Living Program, clients typically live independently or with their families in the community but need some support to maintain their independence. Archway employees provide a wide variety of individualized services in this program. Archway's Residential Community Homes have been in operation for over thirty years providing support to adults with I/DD. Staff provides a wide variety of individualized supports to adults including, supporting good health, life skills, community inclusion... and participation, recreation choices, self-care, household management, budgeting/financial management, and reaching individual goals.
